For international youth work:

develop strategies. international. innovative.

How can international youth work (IYW) activities and learning mobility be made accessible for all young people, including those with disabilities? The IJAB project VISION:INKLUSION seeks to answer that question. Representatives of the IYW community, disability community organisations, disability charities, researchers and administrators are working together to develop an inclusion strategy for IYW by the end of 2017.

Over the last few years, IJAB and other stakeholders have begun to develop approaches to enable young people with a disability to participate in international youth work and non-formal education activities and generally to make international youth work more inclusive. VISION:INKLUSION consolidates the experiences gathered in the process, and contributes an international perspective. At the same time, the project creates synergy for the entire community. VISION:INKLUSION is based on the three dimensions of the Index for Inclusion create inclusive cultures.

The project raises awareness among the various stakeholders of inclusive international youth work and helps to create inclusive attitudes.

establish inclusive structures

The project provides a structure and a platform for networking, enabling shared analyses, expert debates and mutual support. Stakeholders are assisted in establishing and enhancing inclusive structures.

develop inclusive practices

The framework conditions, requirements and methods for inclusive international youth work are researched, developed and disseminated. Stakeholders are assisted in making their international youth projects more inclusive.
